Will Relieve Congestion

The Producers and Refineries corporation have announced that they will begin the new pipe line from the Burkhardt field to Lawton, Okla., where they will have competing railroad facilities and gas will immediately relieve the congestion and will doubtless start off with a lot of new oil, and this will help to move the entire oil movement field.

It may be that the oil will be sent to Tulsa and if so it would be the best possible investment, and should also bring its share to come a sample of high grade crude of the very best quality for the Producers and Refiners big plants in West Tulsa, which has been before known as the oilfin American Refining company and who'd done less act as a common carrier for many other refineries.

There has never been a time in the mid-continent field when there was flush production anywhere that the independent refiner did not come to the rescue and thus save the situation. At Burkhardt there has never so many wells started to bring forth a warning from the Magnolia which stated that there would be more oil than could be used for in that field.

That all brings to mind the situation in the east day in West Virginia, when General Braden at the head of the South Penn Oil Company got the initiative and did not allow one drop of oil to go to waste, but got to the front with his pipe lines and made all connections as needed. At the recent meeting in Cleveland Mr. Braden was congratulated by old customers in West Virginia and really claimed no credit, but was assured by the bunch that the boys nowadays are not up to the old standard of efficiency in caring for oil in new territory.

The Producers and Refineries corporation will profit greatly by the lack of pipe line facilities at Burkhardt, just as E. E. Shock cleaned up a million dollars by the failure of pipe lines to take the oil in the Cushing field, when the price was low and much oil was being produced. History has a way of repeating itself.

Sound Sense in Politics

The oil men of Tulsa are more than ever assured of a square deal in politics after the speech made by W. H. Hays, national committee man at the opera house Thursday night.

All the talk and all the camouflage about government control of the oil business faded away in the light of the statement recently issued by the great head of the republican organization. It is like the manna of old, that saved the children of Israel in the desert of Egypt, and from now on all the threats and bulldogging of the democratic party now in power, will arouse only derision. It has grown stale and the oil men are getting tired and have lost their fear of this sort of stuff which makes no hit henceforth. Enough is a plenty.

Yesterday was Decoration day, the day that has been celebrated for nearly a half century and has brought all patriotic citizens to a realization of the cost of liberty, and is free country. It is not faring well going to be many days before we hear another dose of the kind of talk so freely handed out about what Mr. Wilson and Mr. Starfield are going to do about the oil in-

Important Changes in the Continental Refining Co.

A. A. Hodgeson, who has been president of the Continental Refining Company for the last few years, has retired as president in order to give attention to the activities of the growing company which is affiliated with the Standard Oil Company. He will have charge of all the drilling operations of the company.

The Royal Dutch Gas company of Oklahoma has just leased a small sum of money to finance a gas line across the state. The line is to be built in the fall of this year. The gas will be sold to the Continental Refining Company for $100,000 per month.

A Freak Gas Well

A. H. Hamilton, oil pioneer, was killed in a rock slide on the Dennis farm in the northeast quarter of Muskogee, and the force of the gas is so great that a mass of mud, rocks and sand is thrown with such force that the earth is made to tremble for quite a distance from the well.

Enough gas has been discovered within the last three months in an area of 100 acres of the smaller field to supply a city of a half million people and arrangements will be made to supply an audience of 10,000 people before next winter.
